The Marlins English Language Test, also known as TOSE, is a widely used assessment tool for seafarers' language skills. However, for marine specialists with specialized English language speaking abilities, Marlins offers a customized test to evaluate their fluency and accuracy. The test involves a conversational dialogue between the seafarer and an assessor using a standardized interview form. The test content focuses on everyday conversation topics, ship layout, and technicalities. Upon completion, the assessor provides a score for each category from E to A and defines the overall level of the assessed individual, ranging from Beginner to Advanced. The assessor also includes professional comments and training recommendations in the certificate. TOSE is mandatory for employment in the UK sector, and its target audience includes maritime personnel of any rank. No prior knowledge or experience is required. The Marlins use widely recognised definitions for different English language levels, as outlined in IMO Model Course 3.17, Maritime English, and the ICS Marlins Test of Spoken English (TOSE). These definitions are also accepted by the UK MCA and the Irish Flag Administration. Here are the language level definitions: * Advanced: Near-native speaker proficiency with no difficulty in comprehension and accurate expression of abstract concepts. * Upper Intermediate: Confident use of a wide range of language, making some minor mistakes that do not hinder understanding, and occasional problems of comprehension that can be overcome with help. * Intermediate: Ability to communicate about everyday topics and more abstract concepts, making some mistakes but usually able to correct major errors. * Lower Intermediate: Satisfactory communication about everyday topics with a restricted range of language, and limited understanding of native speaker English. * Elementary: Ability to use English for basic needs, but with limited fluency and many errors, requiring rephrasing, repetition, and simplification of language. * Beginner/False Beginner: Virtually no English proficiency, or knowing a few words/phrases and having extreme difficulty making themselves understood. The TOSE test (Test of Spoken English) evaluates a person's spoken English skills, often required by shipowners and necessary for working on UK-flagged vessels. The test results can be reviewed by the UK ISAS or other government agencies. To pass the TOSE test, an individual must take it at an officially certified center. The test itself involves a conversation between the candidate and a Marlins representative, assessing vocabulary, marine terminology knowledge, spoken English, pronunciation, grammatical sentence construction, and listening comprehension. This comprehensive evaluation helps assess a potential crew member's language proficiency. During the dialogue, topics may range from domestic to professional matters, requiring the examinee to maintain a high-level conversation regardless of the topic. The test aims to evaluate an individual's ability to communicate effectively in English and comprehend information within it. Proper communication is crucial among team members to avoid misunderstandings and more severe consequences. After completing the exam, candidates are evaluated on a five-point scale from A to E, with written comments from the interviewer. A TOSE certificate is issued based on assigned language proficiency levels: Beginner, Elementary, Lower Intermediate, Intermediate, Upper Intermediate, or Advanced. The certified center provides its seals to approve the results of the previous Marlins test. During preparation, focus on oral practice, as it's crucial not to be afraid to communicate in the language. Those who took the test earlier can provide valuable insights into potential nuances. Training online is also essential, as it will prepare you for what to expect and highlight topics worth revisiting. Given that 90% of Ukrainian seafarers want to work on a foreign vessel, implementing Marlins and TOSE is not only meeting STCW Convention requirements but also encouraging language improvement for better job performance. Combining both tests demonstrates a candidate's professional knowledge and English skills, making them suitable for the desired position. Many countries, including the UK Maritime Coastguard Agency and Australian Maritime Safety Authority, accept Marlins and TOSE exams as national standards. Qualified assistance in passing the TOSE test is available through Marin MAN, ensuring professionals help candidates. Effective communication is vital due to the IMO STCW Convention's requirement, with crews needing a certain level of English to meet their rank's competencies. Maritime English assessments are offered for recruitment and training purposes by Marin MAN, designed for the shipping industry and used by vessel operators globally. Our online Marlins English Language Tests are taken on our platform. We use modern testing methods that let employers check understanding of English quickly and accurately. Our Test Platform also helps companies with multiple sites manage test purchases and distribution from one account. Users can practice questions before taking the test, and help information is in many languages. A certificate showing test results can be printed out afterwards. We offer three ways to take a Marlins test: at an approved centre where tests are taken in person, getting an "approved" certificate; remote testing using AI proctoring if travel isn't possible; or taking the test anywhere and receiving a standard certificate with a note that it wasn't supervised. Knowing English well is crucial for safe and successful sea operations because poor communication can cause accidents. The shipping industry developed Standard Marine Communication Phrases (SMCP) to help non-native English speakers communicate better. SMCP aims to improve external and internal ship communications, and it's mandatory under the STCW Convention. Seafarers must know these phrases instinctively in real situations. Marlins' SMCP e-learning course is designed to bridge language gaps and ensure accurate communication with colleagues, other seafarers, and shore personnel. Our course teaches SMCP language rules and conventions, simulates realistic emergency scenarios where learners have to respond correctly, and lets them record their answers for later review. To improve their language skills, seafarers should re-record their responses so they can practice pronunciation of difficult words and phrases. Clear communication is crucial for the safety of crews, vessels, and the environment. Since English is widely used in shipping internationally, crews must have good Maritime English competence to avoid misunderstandings that could have serious consequences. Marlins has developed a new training program that meets IMO standards and is suitable for seafarers with basic language skills (A2 level). This course focuses on communication needs specific to marine engineer officers and crew. By taking this course, seafarers can improve their English language and communication skills in multinational crews, during inspections, and when communicating between ships and shore. The program consists of five units, each covering different maritime themes that integrate grammar, vocabulary, SMCP, and pronunciation. The units include interactive tasks, a speech recording facility to compare speech with native speakers, and revision tasks for feedback. This course is designed to meet the IMO Model Course 3.17 requirements and prepares seafarers for inspections and communication in the shipping industry. Additionally, Marlins offers language tests for seafarers and cruise ship staff. The ICS Marlins English Language Test assesses a seafarer's ability to communicate in English, which is essential for safe operations as mandated by the ISM Code and revised STCW Convention. The Marlins English Language Test for Cruise Ship Staff is tailored specifically for the cruise industry and can be taken by any nationality working on cruise ships. The Marlins English Language Test is available at any location worldwide, focusing on staff and customer interactions within multicultural environments, specifically in the oil and gas industry. The test emphasizes English comprehension rather than technical skills, making it suitable for all nationalities and positions. Online tests are taken at the Marlins Test Platform, where registration is free and purchases can be made with major credit cards. Immediate access to test results is available upon completion. For assistance with the platform, refer to the support page. The Marlins Test Of Spoken English (TOSE) offers a standardized interview format for assessing seafarers' speaking and listening skills across all ranks and nationalities. As a standalone product, it provides an in-depth evaluation of language proficiency.
